You need JavaScript enabled to view it. How Our Property Contracts Are Unique Proper property contracts are different from the standard real estate contracts. They are designed to be customized to the particular situation. Tous provides the ability to give the buyer and seller flexibility through the additions and deletions of terms in real estate contracts. Example: Community Property: If you are married, real estate contracts also have a community property clause. This clause gives equal ownership of the real estate to both spouses. Earnest Money: The contract lists the amount of earnest money deposited. The earnest money is used to show an intention to purchase the property. The earnest money is used as a counter offer. Covenants: Covenants are added to property contracts by homeowners association and neighborhood. Covenants are intended to define how certain areas of the property should be used. By using covenants, homeowners associations and neighborhood groups are able to define the standards of property use as well as standards of property maintenance. Amendments: Common amendments include addenda, covenants, and easements. Addenda: An addendum is an additional clause to a contract. It can add a definition, purpose, or more information to a contract. Covenants: Covenants are a written legal document that define property lines, height, use of property, etc. Covenants are intended to define standards of property use. Easements: Easements are a set of legal terms used to grant rights and obligations to the owner of a property to another person or a third party. Model
