This value should be empty string or a list of filenames, in which case log_mode will log messages to a specified list of files, instead of /dev/stderr. A combination of this flag and the -c flag (which controls the regular expression to match on the filename) is very useful to grep for specific errors (for example, matching on the message text). CONFIGFILE (string): The location of this file, relative to the current directory, must be specified, just like python's "configparser". You can specify multiple configuration files in a comma-separated list. Use of this feature is disabled by default. # # Example 1: .:colors;: # (empty) # Example 2: ./colors;
